On the day that the New York correspondent of the Register became one of the proprietors of that paper, an editorial article appeared in its columns under the caption "Loyai Blacks," describing the negroes as "a set of people whose feeble mental ray can't penetrate the meaning of the words used by the Radicals to describe them;" as "the only race that cheerfully accepts a condition of slavery and thrives under it better than in freedom," as "no more fit for political power than an idiot to pilot a vessel through Hellgate;" as being loyal "as the dog is loyal to the hand that tosses him a bone; as the ox is loyal to crib and stall; as the box is loyal to crib and stall; as the box is loyal to the trough"; as a race that "has followed the instinct of the brute in remembering the hand that tosses lim a bone; as the ox is loyal to crib and stall; as the box is loyal to crib and stall; as the box is loyal to the trough"; as a race that "has followed the instinct of the brute in remembering the hand that that of the brute in remembering the hand that the days in a Convention to which a full blooded "nigger," a "big buck nigger," Joe, Williams of Tennessee, was an accredited and admitted delegate, and in which he sat on a perfect equality, politically and socially, with the fastidious editor of the Register and the other fastidious, blue-blooded, chivairous, high-toned Southern gentlemen composing the West Virgentlemen composing the west virge SATERDAY MORNING, JULY 11.

IT is very kind in the editor of the Register to telegraph us all the way from New York that "Telegrams from radical sources declare that West Virginia, like old Virginia, will ratify the nominations." What if this should turn out to be a mistake? Won't the editor be good enough to indicate the "Radical sources" referred to. "Lord, Lord! How this world is given to lying," was the utterance of one Jack Falstaff after hearing a similar story.

"As AN EVIDENCE of the general idea," telegraphs the editor of the that Cabinet appointments are already being solicited." The "general idea" therefore seems to be "spoils.". We trust "H. S. W." is down for something

Governor Seymour iast night pledged himself personally to the Chase men under no circumstance to accept the nomination. His words were, "I pledge you my sacred honor that I will not," and there are plenty of witnesses. On one side stands vallandigham explaining how he didd it; on the other stands Colonel Van Buren, of New York, ready to take up the wondrous tale. Seymour listens and languidly smiles and "meditates the while upon such plasters" as the Convention's action affords for his personal bonor and word of honor as a gentleman.

Joseph Williams aforesaid gave any indications that his "feeble mental ray penetrated" the significance of his position or that he accepted the situation, and whether "the feeble mental ray" or the able bodied olfactories of the editor perceived anything peculiar in the juxtaposition. We are very much affald these fellows have turned Jose Williams' head "with schemes of negro supremacy and an African empire at the South."

We have had one easay on the "Loyal Blacks." Now let us have one on the "Democratio Nigger," detailing the experience of the editor with this man

Washington, July 9, 1868.

The pariors and diving rooms of the New York hotels.

It is perhaps no more than fair to say in this connection that the report sent out to the country that there was a great contest among the delegates who should be allowed to room with Mr. Williams at his hotel was not strictly in accordance with the facts. At least the contest was not as great as represented.

The Wheeling Register has made great professions of friendship for Union soldiers, and has given itself vast trouble lest the Union party should slight them. Yet the editor of the Register now telegraphs from New York, "It is everywhere admitted that West Virginia [delegation] defeated Hancock." Why did the editor and the rest of his delegation staughter Hancock? Simply because he was an Union soldier who up to the close of the war had done his duty and made a good record.

say it is not worth while to go into the contest. Two or three living in Chase districts, who hoped to get aid from the New York Convention, openly announce that it is useless to ran again with the weight of such nominations to carry. Some of the Democrats will probably rally in the course of time, but the first effect of the Convention's action is that of extreme disgust and despondency. Everybody sees that the issues for the coming campaign are sharply defined, and the Democracy of to-day, is copperheadism of the most obnoxious type. The key note of the contest was struck by Governor Morton this afternoon, in the Senate, in one of the finest and most forcible fifteen minute speeches ever heard in the Capitol.

due for this important change in the law.

In the debate this afternoon on the bill to regulate the vote in the Electoral College, Mr. Morton, as he is in the habit of doing, made a speech of remarkable power, and may be considered as fairly opening the ball after the New York nominations. He had read by the cirk a letter from General F. P. Biair, dated June 30, 1833, in which he took occasion among other things to took occasion among other things to say, that the issues as to greenbacks, taxing bonds, &c., were all nonsense-that the real issue, and the one upon which he alone would consent to go before the Convention, was the uter overthrow of the Congressional reconstruction policy, the destruction of the State governments now inaugurated in the Southern States, and in those soon to follow, by the use of the Executive. In other words, resistance, or another war, was the real issue.

Mr. Morton thanked Gen. Blair for his frankness, and said we now knew precisely what the Republican party had to meet. It is gratifying to see the great Senator still able to take his place every day in the Senate. Though still sillicted, he seems to walk with less difficulty, and would appear as generafflicted, he seems to walk with less difficulty, and would appear as generafly improved. Mr. Willey, who has been quite indisposed for several days, was again in his seat in the Senate most of the session to-day.

But few days have elapsed since there passed through our dingy, dirty city, a gallant band of heroes, who were wending their way to the great city of New York, to exert mighty influence towards making their favorite one, "young greenbacks" by name, a candidate for the Presidency. They came from the pork-packing village of Cincinnati, and had written on their brows the sacred words "greenbacks" From the Pittsburg Gazette of Yesterda cinnall, and had written on their brows the sacred words "greenbacks for bonds," Buoyant with hope, every heart swelling with the prominence of their mission, ardent, boisterous, intoxicated with animal spirits, they marched through the streets, impressing the onlooker with the magnitude of the business they had undertaken. They were to regulate the great conclave of unterfified about to assemble in the wicked metropolis of the country, and "only this and nothing more." They were the Pendleton Escort, But, alas! These men were slain, Their bodies plereed through and through with the poisoned men were slain. Their bodies pierced through and through with the poisoned arrows of the greedy bondholders, will to-day pass through the town. Their to-day pass through the town. Their elastic step will not be heard on our streets. No shout will be raised, no exultant hand wave a banner over their remains. They died as they lived—in their sins. With a greenback folded on their stiff bodies, a bond clasped in their hands, wrapped up in the Confederate flag, these heroes will pass through the town unwept, unbonored and unsung, and yet they are not unworthy of the sympathies of those who bewail the "lost cause." Into the valley of death rode these men. Verily, "in the midst of life we are in death," and "out of this bond-age there is no redemption."

A HINT is furnished to preaching of the Rev. Kanack, in Berlin. Knack stoutly maintained from the pulpit that the Copernican system is a humbug, and that the world does not revolve upon its own axis. This set all the men of science at work. Crowds flocked to hear Knack, and the excitement finally reached such a pitch that the royal mandate was required to silence the popular preacher on the subject of astronomy. Nothing equal to Knaack has been produced in this country unless it is to be found in the New York Convention, which seems no more inclined to recognize existing facts than the sturdy old Berliner.
